

About us

The South African Electrotechnical Export Council (SAEEC) is a non profit company established as a Public Private Partnership between South African business and the Department of Trade and Industry to facilitate the export growth and internationalisation of its members.

Our members are South African registered companies that are manufacturers and providers of products and related services from the Electrotechnical sector namely:

Electrical Engineering, Electronics, Information Technology and Telecommunications

The Council was established in 1991 and reports to a Board of Directors drawn from its members. It provides an important platform on which to coordinate the export marketing efforts of the sector as well as being an official conduit to government to enhance strategies and policies to improve the export support environment.

Our Mission

The facilitation, support, development and growth of exports in the Electrotechnical sector through co-operation and expansion of the base of exporters for the prosperity of our members.

Our Aim

- To address opportunities and issues by capitalising on our combined strength
- To provide a value-added and cost-effective service to our members to increase their international business
- To provide a gateway to companies wishing to identify South African suppliers and partners
- To facilitate effective and sustainable local and international partnerships.
